Seasonal Affective Disorder

Diversity Committee Winter Article

Snow is falling, fireplaces are lit, Christmas lights are showing up everywhere and the wrapping paper is still not quite right. Joy to the World, eight days for the Festival of Lights, and seven days of celebrating and reflecting on core principles and ringing in the New Year. The holiday season is certainly a time for celebration.

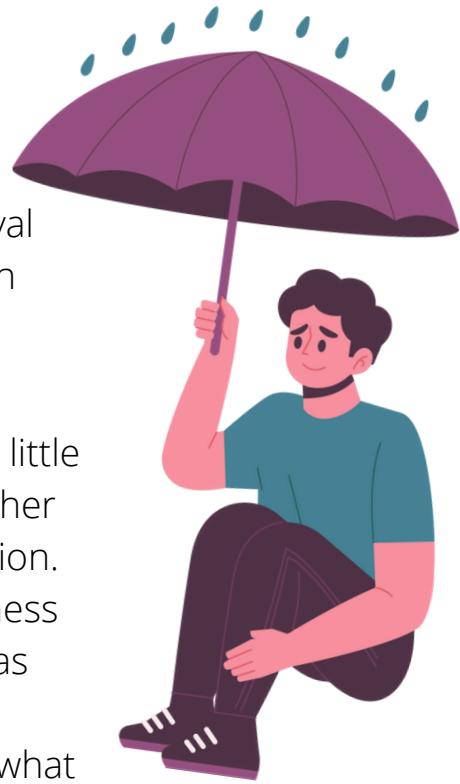

There are also things that can make those winter days a little more difficult: Daylight hours are shorter, and cold weather keeps people inside, which leads to less human interaction. It's no secret that people deal with depression and sadness around the holiday season. It can be easy to write it off as someone is missing a family member or longing for the holidays of the past. While those are very valid feelings, what if there is another reason for it?

SAD, or Seasonal Affective Disorder is typically a person's depression that appears in late fall and early winter. While specific reasons are still unknown, it is believed that lack of light exposure and how it affects the circadian rhythm can be attributed to depression.

Performancehealth.com reports that more than 10 million people in the U.S. have experienced SAD affects four times as many women as men.

What are symptoms that people usually experience during these times? Symptoms can include oversleeping, fatigue, changes in appetite, weight gain, being anxious and feelings of sadness. People might not feel all of those; they might just suffer from one.

There are some treatment methods that can help with SAD. Exposure to bright light that mimic natural sunlight can help with symptoms. Light boxes that mimic sunlight can be used for a period during the day may be helpful. In some cases, medication can help someone who is suffering. An individual can also make changes to their daily routine to include a healthier diet and regular exercise. When is the time to address the situation? Everybody has difficult days, but when these become overwhelming where it's a struggle to function, please reach out to your healthcare provider. If you suffer having thoughts of self-harm, or that the world would be better without you, help is available at 988 Suicide & Crisis Lifeline.

Nominated IASFAA member spotlight

Do you have someone in mind who deserves recognition?

Be sure to submit a nomination in the next IASFAA newsletter survey!

Patti Demers - Director of Financial Assistance at BVU. For the 2nd summer in a row, we were down a person in our small office. She did an amazing job at leading our small team as we all juggled the normally heavy summer workload along with the job duties of the position we had open. She showed up early, stayed late, to be sure things got done. She is always one to advocate for our office to upper administration and does a great job leading our small team.

Renae Armentrout - I don't directly work with her, but Renae Armentrout at Coe College is one of those silent heroes who dives into a project and does the work without being her own cheerleader or expecting others to take on the bulk of the work. Plus she's always smiling!

Taylor Beyal from the University of Iowa., Senior Financial Aid Advisor. Taylor's attention to detail and meticulous need to understand each student case is critical to ensuring that students have the best possible aid offer they can. She goes above and beyond to dig into strange student situations, advocate for students, and ensure that all possible factors are taken into account (not to mention her spreadsheets are immaculate).

Melanie Hausmaninger serves as the Administrative Assistant in the NIACC Financial Aid Office, and she truly keeps the wheels turning in our small but mighty team. Melanie consistently looks for ways to make others' work easier and goes above and beyond to connect with students, ensuring they get the answers they need. Her positive attitude and joyful spirit are contagious, creating a welcoming environment for students, families, and staff alike. We are fortunate to have such a friendly and helpful face greeting everyone who visits our office.

Thank you for all you do, Melanie!

The IASFAA Professional Development Committee has delivered outstanding value to our entire membership this year. They expanded training and growth opportunities for staff across Iowa, no matter their role or experience level. Their work includes monthly Zoom sessions on practical topics, a year-long Leadership Forum that builds confidence and skills, and consistent outreach that supports both new and seasoned financial aid professionals. Their commitment has strengthened our community, created space for learning, and helped members grow in ways that directly improve service to students across the state.

Courteney Kuehl has gone above and beyond to set up the new 2026-2027 year in Workday and hold down the verification area as a team of one since early this summer. Courteney has carefully navigated the process to ensure everything is set up and processed accurately. She's worked very hard with a team of folks on campus and her hard work is deeply appreciated!

Where We Gather; Greatness Happens
MASFAA 2026 Cedar Rapids, Iowa
October 18-21

MASFAA 2026 is coming to Iowa for the first time since 2015, and this is our opportunity to highlight the depth, talent, and leadership across our state. The call for session proposals for the 2026 MASFAA Conference is now open. The conference will be held October 18 through October 21, 2026, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. We want as many Iowa voices represented as possible, and we want your ideas and experiences shared.

Why Iowa Participation Matters

MASFAA has not been in Iowa in more than a decade. Hosting the conference gives Iowa professionals a unique chance to showcase the work happening on our campuses and across our offices. If you have presented at IASFAA, you already have something valuable to share. If you have never presented before, believe in yourself. First-time presenters are encouraged, and you will not be alone. Support is available to help you refine your idea and prepare for a successful presentation.

- Improved a process or workflow
- Navigated OB3 or increased private loan volume
- Built communication strategies that improved clarity
- Trained staff or student employees
- Created tools, calendars, or resources others could use

We are ONE Customer Service Award

"When we talk about exemplary customer service at SWCC, "the two Dianes" are most definitely at the top of the list! These two come to work every day with smiles on their faces and will stop and assist ANY student or customer who enters the front doors of the Administration Center.

The energy they bring to a topic as complicated as financial aid is unmatched. So many times, when I talk to students and parents about their positive experiences at the college, the name Diane is mentioned. In fact, it just happened last week at my table during the Donor-Scholar dinner.

Thank you for representing the Spartan spirit, Diane and Diane! This place would not be the same without the two of you!"

-Terri Higgins, Director of Marketing & Enrollment Management

Thank you for your dedication to our college and our students, Diane and Diane!

WE ARE ONE

Not all financial aid departments have two Diane's but Southwestern Community College (SWCC) does! Diane McCall and Diane Palmer recently received SWCC's We Are ONE Customer Service Award and they couldn't be more deserving! These two are the definition of phenomenal customer service and they exemplify it every day! Diane McCall is co-chair of Community Outreach Committee this year.

I had the wonderful opportunity to perform at the Iowa Music Awards in Burlington at Memorial Auditorium. I also helped hand out awards to some of the most talented artists in the state!

Alyssa Dalton, University of Iowa

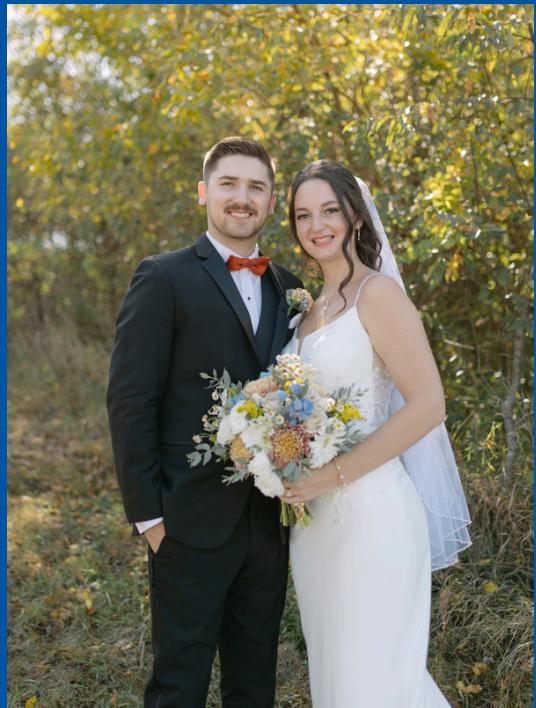

We have embarked on our first year of Elf on the Shelf for my three year old. Please be thinking of me as I try to remember to move this elf every night.

Kelsey Ryder, University of Iowa

A note from Andrew Brimeyer: Greetings from a Maniac (yes, that's really what Mainers call themselves)! As many of you know, my wife and I moved to Maine at the start of November, and we're finally settling into New England life. It's absolutely gorgeous up here with so much to see and do. And don't get me started on the pho restaurant across the street. They do not know our order by heart yet, but they will! I'm working at Unity Environmental University as an Accounts Receivable Specialist, which still keeps me closely connected with our financial aid and bursar office. My wife is rocking it as a nurse in Portland. Maine life is good, cold, and full of delicious soup.

I won 1st place in my age division at the Thanksgiving Turkey Trot, that I ran with my family! (It pays to be old, I guess!)
Alice Bunjer, Faith Baptist Bible College

I got married on October 4 and traveled to Europe with my husband for our honeymoon!
Tatiana Turnbough (Ochoa), University of Iowa

Excited to share that my daughter got married in September!
